WHAT IF WE HAD STOPPED?

NEW HP ADS PROMOTE CHANGE, MERGER

With the proposed merger on the minds of many shareowners, Hewlett-Packard poses an interesting question in its newest print advertisement. Adjacent to a picture of the company's first product, the legendary audio oscillator 200A, the ad asks readers: "What if we had stopped here?"

This new ad appeared December 19 in publications such as the Wall Street Journal, New York Times, USA Today, Houston Chronicle, San Francisco Chronicle and San Jose Mercury News.

The ad targets shareowners and reminds readers that the HP-Compaq merger represents the next step in the company's future and that change is a part of HP's heritage.

"Few doubt our industry is entering a period of profound transformation," the ad reads, "driven by technical advances, increased competition and changing customer requirements. It is in the tradition of HP to remain well in advance of these changes."

In fields of advanced and rapidly changing technologies, cofounder Dave Packard recognized the need for HP to continuously move forward to succeed, contending that to remain static is to lose ground.
