VODAFONE'S MUSIC CATALOGUE SWITCHES TO

DIGITAL RIGHTS MANAGEMENT FREE MP3 FORMAT

FROM UNIVERSAL MUSIC, SONY MUSIC AND EMI ON MOBILE AND PC

- First global mobile network operator to offer DRM free music across both mobile phones and PCs
- Customers are free to play their downloaded music on any of their digital devices
- Over a million tracks to choose from including a huge selection of today's top artists such as Britney Spears, Coldplay, Duffy, Lady Gaga, Lily Allen and The Fray

Vodafone announces today that it has signed deals with the world's largest record companies Universal Music Group, Sony Music Entertainment and EMI Music to offer their tracks and albums DRM free (without digital rights management) across Vodafone markets for both mobile phones and PCs.

The new deals are the first of their kind for a mobile network operator enabling dual delivery of DRM free music to a wide range of mobile phones and PCs with no need to sideload or synchronize. With over a million tracks available from every music genre, for the first time customers will be able to play and enjoy music bought from these three labels via the Vodafone Music store* without any limit to the type of device provided they belong to the customer.

In addition, those customers who have already bought tracks or albums from Universal Music, Sony Music or EMI in WMA format (with DRM) will be able to upgrade them to MP3 at no extra charge within the existing download allowance. DRM free music will be available through a number of Vodafone countries by the summer and will complement Vodafone's current music offerings.

Music is central to many of our customers' lives, said Pieter Knook, Vodafone Internet Services Director. By Vodafone pioneering DRM free on mobile and offering MP3s on PC, they will now have the freedom to download tracks from their favourite artists without any device restrictions allowing them to experience their music however they want it, wherever they are.

Vodafone has been a business partner of Universal Music for six years, said Rob Wells, SVP, Digital, at Universal Music Group International. This new deal shows how serious Vodafone is about music, and opens up new opportunities for both companies - but, more importantly, for consumers and artists.

We are thrilled that this agreement will provide Vodafone's millions of customers in Europe with access to music by our popular local artists and global superstars, commented Thomas Hesse, President, Global Digital Business, U.S. Sales, Corporate Strategy, Sony Music Entertainment. Vodafone's convenient mobile and PC solution gives fans another great way to integrate music into their daily lives and forge an even stronger connection with the artists they love.

EMI has long been a proponent of DRM free music because of the benefits it brings to fans and so we are very supportive of this initiative from Vodafone, said Douglas Merrill, EMI Music's COO of New Music and President, Digital Business. With its international reach and commitment to music, Vodafone is taking a major step forward for our industry by offering consumers more flexibility and choice.

VODAFONE LAUNCHES STANDARD GLOBAL PERFORMANCE GUARANTEES FOR MULTINATIONAL CUSTOMERS

Global service level agreement (SLA) offers:

- greater transparency and predictability for multinationals communications spend and management
- consistent performance levels in managed mobility services in selected countries around the world

Vodafone Global Enterprise – the division of Vodafone which manages the communications needs of the largest multinational companies worldwide – is launching a standard global Service Level Agreement (SLA) to guarantee performance levels across the globe.

As the economic downturn makes multinational enterprises even more reliant on effective communications, the global SLA is designed to give managers greater transparency and predictability.

The SLA will give customers globally consistent and guaranteed performance levels for a range of key communications services including device delivery and incident response, as well as access to reports on network performance and spend management trends across diverse markets.

The first standardised SLA in the mobile industry to cover a multiple country footprint, the initial rollout will include 15 countries, covering 80 per cent of customers' connections with further expansion determined by demand.

The standard offering, available free of charge for Vodafone's Global Enterprise customers, includes:

- Committed dispatch times for SIM cards and mobile devices
- Fault/incident response commitments
- Guaranteed handset repair times

Edgar Filing: VODAFONE GROUP PUBLIC LTD CO - Form 6-K

- Monthly SLA performance reporting
- Monthly network performance reporting for voice and data
- Proactive notifications of major incidents
- Access to a basic version of Vodafone Spend Manager for cost interrogation and control

Customers are able to customise the standard offering for an additional cost to meet specific needs such as:

- Enhanced service levels for key executives, business critical functions or mobile workers
- A centralised interface for billing enquiry and resolution

The importance of effectively managing corporate communications to an agreed standard on a global scale has never been more critical for multinationals.

The recession is obliging companies to reduce travel costs through deploying more innovative communication solutions. At the same time, modern workforces are becoming less office based, meaning that employees expect to be able to work whenever and wherever they want.

Recessionary times are a strong catalyst for multinational corporates to take action and reinvent the way they buy and use communications services, said Nick Jeffery, Director of Vodafone Global Enterprise. To get the most from their global scale and to simplify their operations, multinational corporates are placing more of their communications services in our hands. The launch of global SLAs recognises the importance of these customers and our commitment to meeting their needs for greater transparency, consistency and predictability.

Our customers have told us that there is a need for consistent global service levels in the delivery of devices, performance reporting and incident handling, said Walter Kok, Director of Customer Service Operations. We are setting a new industry standard through our commitment to a standardised global SLA, putting the CIOs of multinational corporates firmly in control of their communications services.

TELEFÓNICA AND VODAFONE ANNOUNCE MILESTONE PAN EUROPEAN COLLABORATION

- Companies to share network infrastructure in Germany, Spain, Ireland and the UK with detailed discussions ongoing in the Czech Republic
- Agreements anticipated to deliver cost efficiencies of hundreds of millions of pounds for each company over 10 years
- Further savings in related areas being explored

Madrid & Newbury, 23 March 2009. Telefónica and Vodafone, two of the world's largest telecommunications operators, today announce a wide-ranging strategic programme to share mobile network assets across selected European operations.

As part of the collaboration, Telefónica and Vodafone are actively exploring opportunities to cooperate in related areas such as the provision of transmission services.

Telefónica and Vodafone will use the agreements to aid the roll out of their respective networks, enhancing service quality for customers in the longer term. The agreements will also reduce the environmental impact of both companies' roll out activities, due to the consolidation of existing sites and joint build of new sites.

The programme is expected to deliver significant business benefits in the process, including the generation of cost savings amounting to hundreds of millions of pounds for both companies over the next 10 years.

The infrastructure sharing initiatives are broadly expected to enable both companies to

Offer enhanced quality of service levels within the network footprint to improve customers' mobile experience as well as support the delivery of services such as mobile broadband to a greater number of customers across a wider coverage area

Reduce the environmental impact of the network by lowering the number of sites required by each company

Reduce network operating costs

Continue to manage their traffic independently

Jointly build new sites where opportunities exist

Matthew Key, CEO of Telefónica Europe, commented: In a fast changing business climate, operators need to look at different ways to serve customers both now and in the future. This industry-leading collaboration means that Telefónica and Vodafone will continue to compete strongly against each other in local markets, while giving our customers enhanced mobile coverage in more places, using fewer mast sites. This will also create significant benefits for Telefónica shareholders. We are actively exploring additional areas for cooperation and, by reducing our costs in areas of the business that customers don't see, we can ensure that we invest in areas they truly value.

Michel Combes, CEO, Vodafone Europe, said: Vodafone has led the market in developing effective network sharing business models, and continues to drive the scale and scope of such agreements. This is a further example of Vodafone's ongoing commitment to deliver the highest levels of service quality for our customers while delivering greater cost efficiencies to the business. This move will enable us to focus our resources on developing more innovative and market leading services while delivering on our pledge to reduce the environmental impact of our network roll out.

Delivering Benefits to Customers

Under the programme, customers in these selected markets can expect to benefit from long-term improvements to coverage, particularly for services such as mobile broadband. By reducing network costs, both companies will be able to continue to invest in developing innovative products and services for customers.

The joint building of new sites and/or consolidation of existing 2G and 3G mast sites, with one site housing the equipment of both companies where previously two would have been used, is expected to lead to a significant reduction in the total number of masts in operation and reduced environmental impact, compared to both companies expanding their networks separately.

The collaboration will also enable both companies to enhance service quality within the network footprint at a faster rate than before, and help to deliver services such as mobile broadband to a wider population.

Shared efficiencies

Where opportunities exist, long-term cost and operational efficiencies will be realised through jointly building new sites and consolidating existing masts and antennas.

There will be reduced capital and operating expenditure arising from the fewer number of sites required, with significant savings anticipated by both companies over 10 years.

In addition, further areas of co-operation are actively being explored on a market by market basis, such as sharing of transmission infrastructure, among others.

Further Detail :

Germany: Both companies to share existing 2G and 3G sites. Shared masts can also be used for microwave backhaul.

Ireland: Both companies to open all network sites for sharing by the other party. New build will also be conducted jointly where roll-out plans are aligned.

Spain: Both companies to extend existing site share agreement from 2007, which includes the shared usage of power, cabinets and mast. To date 2,200 sites are shared under this agreement. During 2009 and 2010 additional sites will be included.

UK: Both companies to focus on joint build of new sites and consolidation of existing 2G and 3G sites.

-ends-

NOTES TO EDITORS

Principles of network sharing: In the UK and Ireland, the elements of the network to be shared include: masts, antennas, sites, cabinets and power supply. The network electronics Nodes B (3G), BTS (2G) and the radio network controllers which are linked to the core network are to remain independent. In Germany and Spain, masts and cabinets are shared, along with power supply.
