UMC's 90-nanometer Manufacturing Technology Sees Strong Acceptance from Industry Leaders

1. Date of occurrence of the event: 2004/05/24

2. Cause of occurrence:

HSINCHU, Taiwan, May 24, 2004 UMC (NYSE: UMC; TSE: 2303), a world leading semiconductor foundry, is driving the foundry industry's migration to 90nm technology, with some of the world's largest IC companies currently utilizing UMC for the fabrication of their most advanced 90nm chips. UMC first announced working 90nm customer silicon in March of 2003, and over the last year has been qualified for volume production by several major customers, including Xilinx, the world leader in programmable logic, and Texas Instruments, the largest supplier of silicon for wireless handsets. The speed of this ramp-to-volume production has surpassed the projections of most industry observers, and puts UMC clearly ahead of its competitors in the foundry industry. Products taking advantage of UMC's 90nm technology are being adopted for use in a wide range of electronic products due to the significant benefits that they offer in terms of performance, power consumption and cost.

Dr. Jackson Hu, CEO of UMC, stated, "Process technology leadership requires a huge commitment in terms of research and development resources. UMC has consistently made that commitment because it is an important part of our fundamental strategy of maximizing the competitiveness of our customer's products. Today, we are extremely happy to see our hard work paying off with the production success of customers utilizing our 90nm foundry services. We are also excited to see that fabless companies and IDMs are both taking advantage of the benefits of our foundry services. This clearly shows the important role that foundry companies have come to play in reducing the risks associated with the extremely capital-intensive semiconductor industry. It is truly a win-win situation for all involved."

XILINX and UMC Develop Industry's First FPGAs to Utilize Triple-Oxide 90nm Technology

1. Date of occurrence of the event: 2004/06/14

2. Cause of occurrence:

HSINCHU, Taiwan, and SAN JOSE, Calif., June 14, 2004 Xilinx, Inc. (NASDAQ:XLNX), the world's leading supplier of programmable logic solutions and inventor of the FPGA, and leading global semiconductor foundry UMC (NYSE: UMC), today announced production of the industry's first FPGA products manufactured using 90nm triple-oxide technology. By using three different thicknesses of the insulating gate oxide layers, the companies were able to break the traditional tradeoff between power consumption and performance, and expect to lower static and dynamic power consumption by 50 percent from previous generation devices with the Virtex-4™ platform FPGA family. Xilinx has already received initial wafers from UMC using this breakthrough triple-oxide 90nm technology.

Power management has become a critical requirement of customers, especially with increased performance, bandwidth and the move to 90nm technology, said Erich Goetting, vice president and general manager of the Advanced Products Division at Xilinx. Therefore, reduced power consumption and increased silicon performance were both high on the priority list for Virtex-4 development. Working with UMC, we have leveraged the benefits of triple-oxide technology on 90nm to break the industry trend of increased power consumption when moving from 130nm to 90nm. The new Virtex-4 platform FPGAs will reduce both static and dynamic power consumption by up to 50 percent.

UMC and Xilinx delivered the industry's first 90nm FPGAs in March of 2003. UMC is now in volume production for various 90nm products including the Xilinx Spartan-3™ family of FPGAs.

Dr. S.W. Sun, senior vice president in charge of UMC's Central Research and Development, said, "UMC develops technologies that are targeted for our customer's requirements. For the 90nm node this includes triple gate oxide, in which Xilinx has exploited for their new line of FPGAs. We are pleased to deliver enabling technologies to help Xilinx achieve their performance targets for the Virtex-4 product line, and look forward to reaching future technology milestones together."
