Basic terms reached on COPS and RSSA contracts

Alaska and IAM negotiation teams still working on final language, open issues

Alaska Airlines and the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAM) negotiation committees have reached agreements in principle on basic terms for both the clerical, office and passenger service (COPS) and ramp service and stores agents (RSSA) contracts following talks in early May. Open issues still remain, and the local negotiation teams are continuing to work on contract language related to the agreed terms and the open issues.

The COPS contract, which became amendable in October 2004, covers about 3,000 Alaska customer service, reservation sales and operations agents, and accounting specialists. Nearly 650 ramp service and stores agents are covered by the RSSA contract, which became amendable in January 2004.
