NYSE Euronext will mail the definitive proxy statement/prospectus (when finalized) to its stockholders in connection with the vote to approve the merger of NYSE Euronext and a wholly owned subsidiary of Holding, and Holding will mail the offering prospectus to Deutsche Boerse AG shareholders in the United States in connection with Holding's offer to acquire all of the outstanding shares of Deutsche Boerse AG. Holding has also filed an offer document with the German Federal Financial Supervisory Authority (Bundesanstalt fuer Finanzdienstleistungsaufsicht) (BaFin), which was approved by the BaFin for publication pursuant to the German Takeover Act (Wertpapiererwerbs-und Übernahmegesetz), and was published on May 4, 2011.

English translation of an interview with Dominique Cerutti, President and Deputy Chief Executive Officer of NYSE Euronext, that appeared in Le Figaro on May 4, 2011:

Stock markets: NYSE Euronext makes a plea for Europe

NYSE Euronext Deputy CEO Dominique Cerutti defends the planned merger with Deutsche Börse on the grounds that it would give Europe a larger place in global finance, an opportunity that will not come again.

With Nasdaq and ICE preparing a hostile bid for NYSE Euronext, Dominique Cerutti, Deputy CEO of the trans-Atlantic exchange, warns against their plan, which would jeopardize jobs in Paris.

LE FIGARO: Nasdaq and ICE have announced they are preparing a hostile bid for NYSE Euronext. What is your reaction?

Dominique Cerutti: Nasdaq and ICE have announced that, under certain conditions, they may declare a bid sometime in May. What's more, they are keeping the same terms and conditions that NYSE Euronext's Board of Directors has already turned down twice.

Yes, but their financial bid is more attractive than Deutsche Börse's

Nasdaq and ICE are focusing squarely on very short-term value creation. Their plan is simply a belated reaction and an attempted dismantling in a fast consolidating environment in which they risk being totally marginalized. Furthermore, the estimated premium over the Deutsche Börse combination has eroded down to 7% (at yesterday's market close). We are paying attention to what our shareholders are telling us, and we're examining ways to narrow the gap even further.

Why do you say that your plan will create greater value?

On the one hand you have Nasdaq, which is already in debt and wants to finance its acquisition by taking on more debt, a move that could prompt a review of its credit rating. It is promising highly aggressive synergies that, in the final analysis, come down to concentrating on a single business: cash listing and trading. On the other hand you have a plan to create the world's biggest exchange offering a broad range of products and services to serve the best interests of all stakeholders—not just shareholders but also issuers, intermediaries and regulators. In addition, the center of gravity of this top-flight regulated market will be firmly anchored in Europe and should eventually give Europe a larger place in global finance. This opportunity will not come again, given that the next stage in the consolidation process is already underway, with the increasing clout of Asian financial centers.

Where does that leave Paris?

The Nasdaq-ICE plan would basically mean dismantling NYSE Euronext: the derivatives business would go to ICE, while Nasdaq would get the cash business. Consequently, Paris-listed commodity contracts, such as milling wheat and rapeseed, would likely be transferred to ICE's London platform. Bear in mind that continental derivatives account for 23% of NYSE Euronext's European derivatives. Likewise, if we understand their bid correctly, Nasdaq intends to migrate our markets to OMX's technology, whereas we consider our own technology to be far superior. A migration would certainly be costly for our clients and is bound to jeopardize jobs in Paris, where half of the 400 staff is currently developing technological solutions.

How has the French financial community reacted to your plan?

Our plan with Deutsche Börse would allow major French companies to benefit from a market with higher levels of quality and liquidity. Even so, they want to be sure that the governance arrangements will be evenly balanced between New York, Frankfurt and Paris, which we have promised them will be the case. Financial intermediaries see an opportunity in terms of lower infrastructure costs and optimized capital because a combination [with Deutsche Börse] would give them a single entry point to all our markets.

But what use is all this support? It is the shareholders who will make the decision at the Shareholders meeting on July 7.

Our shareholders will take a stance based not only on the financial value of our plans but also on their feasibility. The authorities have embarked on a lengthy process of analysis that will take account of the opinions of the various stakeholders. As far as we are concerned, we will go all the way.
