 COHEN & STEERS QUALITY INCOME REALTY FUND, INC.

April 9, 2003

To Our Shareholders:

We are pleased to submit to you our report for the quarter ended March 31, 2003. The net asset value per share at that date was $12.93. During the quarter, three $0.105 per share monthly dividends were declared and paid. In addition, on March 6, 2003, the fund announced an increase in its next three monthly dividends to $0.11 per share, payable on April 30, 2003, May 30, 2003 and June 30, 2003. The new dividend represents an increase of approximately 4.8% in the monthly rate.

INVESTMENT REVIEW

For the quarter, Cohen & Steers Quality Income Realty Fund had a total return, based on income and change in net asset value, of -0.1%. This compares with the NAREIT Equity REIT Index's(a) total return of 0.7%.

The recent quarter-end represents the third anniversary of the longest period in which REITs outperformed the broader stock market. They did so by a record margin, as shown in the following table.

ANNUALIZED TOTAL RETURN PERFORMANCE
 Periods ended 3/31/03

	NAREIT -----	S&P 500 -----	NASDAQ -----
1 year.....	-3.5%	-24.8%	-27.0%
2 years.....	8.9%	-13.2%	-14.3%
3 years.....	13.7%	-16.1%	-33.4%

Despite the fact that the NAREIT index was up just 0.7% during the quarter, several underlying trends emerged that may portend changing leadership. As has been the case for several quarters, the total return leaders were the shopping center (8.3% total return), regional mall (7.0%), and industrial (2.7%) sectors. Laggards in the quarter once again included hotel (-20.5%) and apartment (-1.4%), but also included health care (-6.5%). During the month of March, changing trends were even more distinct as office was the single best performing sector, while health care was the worst.

With respect to office stocks, we believe that their valuations and depressed level of share prices have influenced recent performance. Meanwhile, there continues to be a strong bid in the private market for quality office assets, which we believe supports our estimates of asset values. In addition, we are beginning to detect that

 (a) The NAREIT Equity REIT Index is an unmanaged, market capitalization weighted index of all publicly traded REITs that invest predominantly in the equity ownership of real estate. The index is designed to reflect the performance of all publicly traded equity REITs as a whole.

vacancy rates are in the process of peaking in some important markets. With our predicted resumption of economic growth in the second half, that important indicator may actually improve very shortly.

We believe that the performance of the health care sector is the result of two factors. Foremost is that it appears that federal, state and local budget deficits are having a negative influence on reimbursement rates, thereby diminishing the profitability of facility operators and the growth prospects of the health care REITs. In addition, we suspect that investors may perceive the decline in interest rates -- which helped drive excellent returns from health care REITs over the past two years -- as beginning to reverse. During the quarter, we selectively reduced our health care weight, and we expect to continue to do so opportunistically going forward.

As was the case with many sectors of the financial markets, REITs experienced volatility during the first three months of the year based on quickly changing expectations with respect to economic growth, interest rates and events leading up to the war in Iraq. REITs were also subject to some unique factors. Perhaps most significant were the varied interpretations and expectations of the Bush administration's proposal to eliminate the double taxation of corporate dividends. Since the proposal would not be a positive for REITs -- because REITs already don't pay taxes -- the market's initial reaction was that the proposal would have to be a negative. After some reflection, however, it has become clearer that the complexities of the proposed new rules make perceived advantages to non-REIT companies very hard to quantify and rely upon, perhaps even magnifying the benefits of the reliable, high dividend yields provided by REITs. Following the president's proposal, for example, two companies currently taxed as C corporations (Capital Trust and Catellus Corporation) announced their intentions to convert to REIT status, providing further evidence of REITs' continuing appeal.

One issue that continues to be of paramount importance to investors in all asset classes is the future course of the U.S. economy. Once the Iraq war is behind us (and as long as there are no further geopolitical crises), the performance of stocks, bonds and real estate will depend entirely on a resumption of economic and job growth. Since fiscal and monetary policies could hardly be more accommodative than they are now, our assumption is that this stimulus will shortly work its way into the system and that the United States will be able to avert an economic crisis. Based upon the stock market's strong rally as the war began (with REITs fully participating), we suspect that investors are more confidently anticipating second half 2003 growth.

INVESTMENT OUTLOOK

The investment performance of REITs over the past 18 months has marked a sharp change in attitudes of a broad range of investors. While we have never been proponents of analyzing funds' flows in order to gauge or predict investment performance, there is now convincing evidence that new sources of demand for REIT shares are having a strong influence on valuations. Emerging data suggest that significant capital is now flowing to the REIT industry, much of which we believe is permanent. This is in contrast to the late 1990s, when investor capital flowed into and out of the sector primarily as a result of changing price and profit momentum.

COHEN & STEERS QUALITY INCOME REALTY FUND, INC.

Since Equity Office Properties became the first REIT to be added to the S&P 500 Index in October 2001, 17 other REITs have been added to this and two other major S&P indexes, creating demand for at least $3.6 billion worth of shares from index funds. Once these shares are purchased, they remain in these funds, subject to fund inflows and outflows, unless the company is deleted from the index. Based on the market capitalization of REITs relative to the broader market, it is our belief that there will be a continual increase in the number of REITs being added to these indexes. An additional source of permanent demand for REIT shares is the growing number of closed-end mutual funds that invest exclusively in REITs. These funds have a fixed capital structure -- their shares trade on major stock exchanges, and they do not allow for redemptions or liquidation. Therefore, these funds must remain fully invested in REITs. Over $4 billion has been raised within this structure and we expect more new funds to be created in the near future.

One further source of demand for REIT shares is an array of retirement accounts. Whereas during the 1990s less than 1% of retirement accounts (such as 401k plans) offered real estate options, it is now estimated that nearly 10% of such plans include REIT mutual funds in their menus. It is our understanding that this number is increasing steadily, with many prominent financial institutions recently adopting the REIT option. In addition, a growing number of financial planners and advisors have accepted REITs as an asset class that deserves representation in investor portfolios. While we cannot estimate what proportion of open-end mutual fund inflows are from such sources, we are confident that the combination of these accounts, along with numerous individuals and advisors who adhere to asset allocation models, will continue to make significant ongoing contributions to the REIT asset class. Over the past 18 months, over $3 billion of cash has flowed into open-end REIT mutual funds. REITs have also become a popular component of the real estate allocations of other retirement accounts such as defined benefit plans. Based on the readings from various institutional investment services, it is estimated that a further $4 billion has been committed to REITs over this same time frame.

Finally, with share prices of some REITs trading well below net asset value, more and more companies are opting to repurchase their shares rather than make new investments. Indeed, because property prices have held up extremely well, many REITs have become net sellers of property, using the cash proceeds to retire debt, fund share repurchase and, in some cases, just sit on the cash in anticipation of future acquisition opportunities. We estimate that there have been over $1.5 billion of share repurchases over the past year and a half. Offsetting this is the issuance of approximately $6.5 billion of common equity by other REITs during the same period.

Adding these flows together, as shown below, we estimate that $10.2 billion of incremental demand for REIT shares has been created. In relation to the $160 billion equity market capitalization of the equity REIT universe, of which a large percentage is held by insiders and founding families, we consider this to be a significant proportion. While it may be difficult to extrapolate this trend into the future, our belief is that the factors underlying this trend will remain prominent in the near future.

NET DEMAND.....	$ 10.2 BILLION

While the underlying demand for REITs may be substantial, the returns they generate will primarily be dependent on the course of real estate fundamentals. As we mentioned, a stronger economy that brings with it a resumption of job growth will be required in order for occupancies and rents to improve in almost every property type. In light of the economic stimulus currently in place and increased stimulus that may be provided by the tax reduction proposal now being considered by Congress, we believe it would be unprecedented if there were not a resumption of strong economic growth.

Anticipating a strengthening economy, our investment strategy continues to emphasize the office, industrial and regional mall sectors. Despite headlines that suggest aggravated conditions in the office market, new construction has declined precipitously. This suggests to us that once demand begins to increase, both occupancies and rents will once again begin to grow. The industrial and mall sectors will also be direct beneficiaries of an improved economy. We have reduced our exposure to the health care sector due to its slower growth potential as well as its high sensitivity to interest rates. We remain cautious on the apartment sector due to a continued high level of construction, despite the decline in demand resulting from the strength of single-family housing.

Irespective of when economic growth finally accelerates, we believe the REIT industry overall remains extremely healthy, as it is strongly capitalized and generates cash flow comfortably in excess of current dividends. Despite a small handful of dividend cuts, 29 companies have already raised their dividend payouts this year. As dividends tend to drive REITs' long-term returns, these attractive dividend yields have the potential to make REITs even more popular with investors, especially in an environment where many analysts are lowering expectations for most other asset classes. Consequently, we expect REITs to remain an important and growing component of investors' portfolios.

Sincerely,

MARTIN COHEN
