From: Office of John W. Thompson

To: Altiris employees

I wanted to take a moment to update you on the progress of bringing Altiris into the Symantec family. A large group of leaders representing core functions for both companies met in Cupertino earlier this month to begin to discuss and plan how the two companies will come together in very practical ways. This meeting, led by James Socas, senior vice president, corporate development, Symantec, and Steve Madigan, vice president, corporate development, Altiris, included comparing processes spanning finance and procurement, IT, HR, sales and marketing, communications and other shared services to support the Altiris team in joining Symantec.

While there are always challenges in bringing two large companies together while maintaining our ongoing business commitments to our customers, I'm pleased to report that this first large integration meeting underscored the cultural fit of and similar business approaches of our two companies.

We are working hard to ensure a smooth transition for employees, partners and customers as we combine the endpoint management capabilities of Altiris with the security expertise of Symantec. As you may have heard, this past week we received notification of early termination of the waiting period imposed by the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act concerning the proposed acquisition. While of course we cannot fully explore all processes and strategies until all regulatory approvals are in place and the deal is closed, from what we have seen to date, my optimism continues to grow for the future of this combination for everyone involved.

We're fortunate to have a great group of Altiris and Symantec employees targeting their energy on driving transition plans so that everyone else can focus on the work at hand to close the quarter. This is an exciting time for both companies as we prepare to join forces.

Best regards,

John W. Thompson

Chairman and CEO

Symantec Corporation
