PRESENTATION

Stephen Vartan Tanal - Goldman Sachs Group Inc., Research Division - Equity Analyst

Thank you guys for joining us today. My name is Steve Tanal. I'm the managed care and providers analyst for Goldman. To my left is Eric Palmer, CFO Cigna; and to his left is Will McDowell, who heads off the IR effort of the company.

We're doing everything today with a sort of fireside chat format. I've got my questions. I'm sure there's some in the audience as well, so we'll keep an eye out. If you have a question at any point, just raise your hand, and we'll try to get a mic over to you. And with that, Eric, I think you have a couple of remarks to kick off with, and then we'll jump right in.

Eric Palmer - Cigna Corporation - Executive VP & CFO

Okay. Thank you, Steve. Good morning, everyone, and thanks for joining us today and for your interest in Cigna. * *
* As I'm sure you know, we announced our proposed acquisition of Express Scripts back on March 8, and we continue to be on track for that transaction to close by the end of the year. I suspect we'll probably have a few questions on that topic as we get into it.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Stephen Vartan Tanal - Goldman Sachs Group Inc., Research Division - Equity Analyst

Okay. Shifting gears a little bit to talk about Express Scripts. I guess, there's so many different ways to come at this, but let me start with a really simple question and see where you go from there. What impact do you think Express could have on your overall medical cost trend over time, and how do you think about that?

Eric Palmer - Cigna Corporation - Executive VP & CFO

Well, we think the opportunity of to, of course, improve affordability through the acquisition with Express Scripts is really compelling. And just to step back, as we contemplated our strategy and the evolution of our strategy back in 2017, we really set off to look at the potential transactions or the potential uses of things that we can build organically to advance our strategy. We talked a lot about improving affordability as a key part of our strategy and improving our ability to offer personalized solutions on those as elements of our strategy and, as conducted that broad review, ultimately concluded that Express Scripts offered the single best capability or the single best opportunity to meaningfully move the needle as it related to improving affordability. And again, a couple of specific things on that. First of all, Express Scripts' leading capabilities as it relates to Specialty Pharmacy and the capabilities that they offer there are important now and even more important over the future. The growth in the Specialty cost trend -- in the Specialty cost category is already significant and is the fastest growing source of costs. And so having that as part of the organization and being able to connect those capabilities with our collaboratives offers a potential to pull a meaningful amount of improved quality and improved cost through the system. Additionally, there are opportunities just by virtue of the leading presence that Express Scripts has in terms of the overall total cost picture bring those to and through up and connecting those back with our collaboratives are meaningful as well. So again, I think a real opportunity to help further align incentives across how the pharmacy space works, back to the point of prescribing and back to getting the information to our customers to work to pull -- to full cross-sell the system, and we're quite excited about the opportunity to improve that affordability.

Stephen Vartan Tanal - Goldman Sachs Group Inc., Research Division - Equity Analyst

So one of the questions on my mind when you announced the deal was, "Gee, Cigna has a PBM today. What are they really gaining here?" And you spent a lot of time talking about Specialty. And so, are there any specific capabilities you could spike out here relative to the Specialty Pharmacy side that you're particularly excited about? Or is it really, just about the scale that they have that you guys lack? How would you go about that?

Eric Palmer - Cigna Corporation - Executive VP & CFO

Yes, to step back. We do own and operate a PBM today. Our PBM has served us really well over the course of the last number of years. We made a significant amount of study and then, ultimately, investment in our current PBM model. As many of you probably know, we have an arrangement where we perform -- we own and operate our PBM, first of all. We perform many of the components of operating a PBM, internally. We also have a relationship with Optum via their purchase of Catamaran with where we collaborate in certain elements of the PBM operation and such. And again, at a macro level, that PBM has served us well, and it's been a good model for us, served us particularly well in how we've integrated it with our offerings in the smaller end of our market segment. Now looking at Express Scripts, specifically, in terms of what do we get in addition to those capabilities, Specialty is clearly an area of -- it's really a difference maker in terms of the overall transaction. I'd note that for Specialty business today has all of its own specialty capabilities that's not something that's part of our agreement with Optum. And moving from our Specialty capabilities to the Express Scripts, Specialty capabilities are really meaningful. Express group has the depth of clinical expertise to offer and operate I really think that not just one Specialty Pharmacy but [15] different Specialty Pharmacies aligned around specific conditions with the depth of all of the resources necessary to provide quality, effective treatment for individuals with those types of conditions. And so, instead of just having an overall Specialty Pharmacy, there's an oncological pharmacy with an expertise around the different types of [adiposes] and different genotypes and things along those lines as well as all the social work and other types of resources needed to bring those capabilities to the maximum impact, maximum positive impact, that they could have. So again, a lot of deep clinical expertise, just at a level that we didn't have in terms of our Specialty capabilities could get us at that point to -- would be around just the overall aggregation of and the availability of, really, a significant amount of information that's really useful in helping to fuel how we can design collaborative programs and also use to exchange of information effectively back to getting things lined up from a delivery system perspective. That's something that a level and a capability that exists at Express that we didn't have. So that's, again, a couple of specific examples.

Stephen Vartan Tanal - Goldman Sachs Group Inc., Research Division - Equity Analyst

Perfect, yes, that's helpful. And so when I think about what you gain there, a lot of it ultimately will translate the cost savings over time, some in nearer term, some in longer term. And I think what Cigna would really benefit from that is in a risk construct, those cross-savings where it would flow to your bottom line as opposed to just your clients. Or there's obvious benefits to both of them. But I wonder how you'd address the question of why make such a big bet if you didn't want to really get bigger, more competitive on the risk side?

Eric Palmer - Cigna Corporation - Executive VP & CFO

Well, we do want to get bigger and more competitive on the risk side and on the self-funded side. So again, I would point you toward the improved affordability benefits, all the funding arrangements. And we've set ourselves up to be rewarded for and participate in the benefit of improving costs for our clients in the self-funded side as well as on the risk side. So I think there's opportunity across both dimensions, in terms of improving the underlying affordability that has benefits in terms of improved competitiveness of offering those benefits in terms of ultimately saving our clients' money and giving us the opportunity to earn a portion of those savings. And again, we're really excited about the opportunity across all the funding arrangements there.

I just have one back on Express. I'm curious if you could maybe talk a little bit about on how you thought about attrition when you were evaluating the potential Express transaction and, specifically, thinking about to health plan business in states that outsource the pharmacy function to Express that you compete with on the medical side.

Eric Palmer - Cigna Corporation - Executive VP & CFO

Yes, so overall, just to step back a little bit, we're quite excited about the opportunity to serve other plans and peers and such. And so we're actually bringing additional services and such to that market. We'll be doing that right over time in terms of demonstrating that, but at a macro level, we're excited about that as an opportunity to serve that market. What we contemplated the Express transaction, we, of course, in the course of our diligence, worked to understand the nature of the commitments they had made, the nature of the markets they are operating in and, ultimately, are quite comfortable that we'll be able to effectively address the needs and desires of those buyers. With any approach in terms of those scale transactions, we made assumptions around what types of disruption that could be present. We haven't publicly had to mention those but did make an appropriate provision for that in the construction of the financial model. And again, overall, we're excited about the opportunity to have that as an additional model to be able to serve that Cigna hasn't historically focused on as much.
